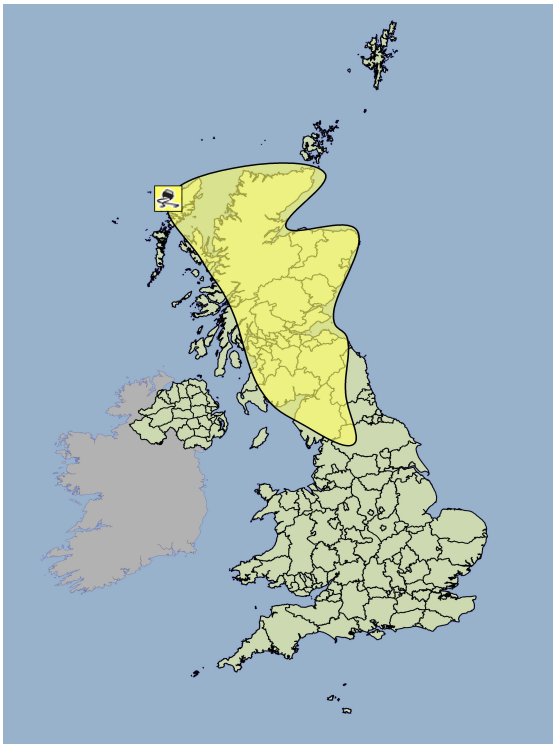
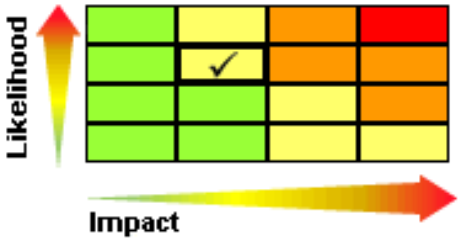
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Showers of rain, sleet and snow will affect some northern parts on Sunday night and into Monday. Overnight, as road temperatures fall below freezing, icy stretches are likely. Snow accumulations will very variable given the showery situation, but are likely to be greatest over high ground in northern Scotland. There is also the risk of some slight accumulations even to low-levels further south into northern England, especially across Cumbria and Pennine areas.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 22:00 on Sun, 29th Mar 2015 until 09:00 on Mon, 30th Mar 2015

Cold air will spread in across the north of the UK by Sunday evening allowing many road temperatures to fall below zero overnight. As wintry showers move in from the northwest, icy stretches are liable to form on any untreated roads.

These showers will fall as snow in places with the potential for overnight localised accumulations of 1-2cm at lower levels and 2-5cm over some of the highest routes.

The public should be aware of the potential for hazardous driving conditions, though the risk will decrease quickly on Tuesday morning as temperatures rise again.
